When we designed Ceres seating, we started with scientific research on how people sit. As a result, Ceres provides a superior sitting experience—along with a clean, purposeful design. The distinctive lines of the Ceres task chair echo the motion of your body as you sit back and recline. Even the coordinating, stackable multi-purpose chair features an articulating back to encourage movement and enhance comfort.

ERGONOMIC SUPPORT, UPRIGHT, OR RECLINED

STANDARD SUPPORT - UPRIGHT
When sitting upright in a standard office chair, you may feel a separation between your upper back and the backrest.

CERES SUPPORT - UPRIGHT
Sitting upright in a Ceres task chair, you'll feel the backrest supporting you from the shoulders down to the lumbar.

STANDARD SUPPORT - RECLINED
As you recline in a standard office chair, the backrest pulls away from you, creating a gap in lumbar support.

CERES SUPPORT - RECLINED
The synchronized tilt of the Ceres task chair mimics the motion of your body as you recline to provide total support with no lumbar gap.

Question: Would you rather sit on your office chair or in it? If the latter sounds better—being cradled in support, rather than perched on a pillow—you might want to center your search on Nucleus. Trim and streamlined, Nucleus uses an advanced suspension material that distributes weight evenly across the seat and molds to your back, delivering support precisely where it's needed.

UNIQUE CONSTRUCTION
The internal seat structure of a Nucleus chair uses a mesh suspension material overmolded with foam.

FEWER PRESSURE POINTS
Pressure-mapping studies show how the unique seat construction of Nucleus distributes weight evenly, eliminating pressure points.

COMPETITIVE ANALYSIS
The same study revealed larger areas of concentrated pressure in office chairs with standard seat construction.

Does that mean they're one size fits all? Not at HON. You can choose two, four, or five drawers; letter or legal sizes; and the features that best meet your needs and budget.
